GLOBAL STUDIES (B.A.)

The Global Studies program is designed for students passionate about understanding and being active participants in a globalized world. Students learn about global institutions, issues, and movements from an interdisciplinary perspective by:

1. developing language skills, which are essential to global communication and cultural understanding;
2. taking core courses in humanities and social sciences that provide students with an interdisciplinary and theoretical introduction to global studies; and,
3. specializing in global politics and economies, health and environment, and cultures and identities.

Throughout the curriculum students will think critically about questions related to global justice, inequality, how globalization impacts different cultures and regions around the world, and the responsibilities of global citizenship. A Global Studies major can prepare students for careers in government, diplomacy, law, health professions, teaching, research, non-governmental organizations, development, and business.

Through the program students will:
1. demonstrate intermediate-level skills in reading, writing, speaking, and listening in one language other than English, or elementary-level skills in reading, writing, speaking, and listening in two languages other than English.
2. analyze ways in which global issues intersect with the individual and the social with respect to gender, sexuality, class, race, and ethnicity.
3. describe the processes of globalization from economic, political, environmental, historical, and cultural perspectives and how these processes impact social structures and people’s everyday lives.
4. connect globalization and global issues to the local, the regional (as it relates to regional issues within nation states), and the national.

Students wishing to pursue the major in global studies should meet with the program director and the undergraduate advisor in Classical and Modern Languages, Literatures, and Cultures for advising.

Students should refer to the CMLLC program requirements (http://bulletins.wayne.edu/undergraduate/classical-modern-languages-literatures-cultures/requirements) for admission, degree, and general education requirements.
